We thought we knew what was happening in Africa when the AIDS pandemic raged across the continent, sweeping away 35 million lives. But we never understood it the way it's revealed in this book, in the sometimes raw and always intimate voices of the grandmothers who stepped in to raise their orphaned grandchildren when no one else was left alive.

This book tells the stories of a dynamic movement of grandmothers who rallied in response. Starting in Canada and spreading across the globe, it now encompasses thousands of grandmothers on several continents. Together, resolute grandmothers in Africa and around the world are reclaiming hope and courageously saving lives. Their voices will leap straight into your heart. Their unguarded faces, in portraits that glow with character, pain and humor, will captivate you.
